March 2025 Commentary

The MSCI World Index retreated in February, concluding another turbulent trading period dominated by escalating tariff tensions. U.S. equities bore the brunt of the downturn, with mounting concerns around inflationary pressures and decelerating growth. This contributed to deteriorating consumer sentiment as markets grappled with uncertainty surrounding the Trump administration's policy direction.

European markets demonstrated greater resilience, with our healthcare holdings continuing their robust performance trajectory. The standout performers in our portfolio were three leading global biotech firms: Amgen, Gilead Sciences, and Roche. Gilead Sciences posted strong results and provided an enhanced outlook for its recently developed HIV and liver disease treatments, Biktarvy and Livdelzi, sending its shares higher by 19%. Similarly, both Amgen and Roche reported significant advancements in their clinical obesity treatment pipelines, driving positive share price momentum.

Conversely, Danish pharmaceutical giant Novo Nordisk, manufacturer of the popular Ozempic obesity medication, continues to face intensifying competitive pressures, with its shares declining approximately 50% from last summer's peak. Sodefi maintains no position in Novo Nordisk.

The Sodefi equity portfolio delivered a positive return of 0.3%, outperforming the MSCI World Index by 1.1%.

Our managed futures allocation faced challenges in an environment characterized by short-term policy uncertainties and limited market directionality. A weakening U.S. dollar coupled with sharp reversals in previously strong soft commodity trends, particularly in cocoa, resulted in negative performance for February. The SMFF returned -4.5% in February.

Total performance for Sodefi Fund in February was -0.79%, resulting in a year-to-date return of 3.58% for 2025.
